Description

Cyberman head from 'Doctor Who', 1982

A Cyberman head of silver-painted fibreglass, with aluminium mesh detailing to eyes and PVC tubing to sides, believed to have been used in the story Earthshock. It is thought to have been part of the costume that gets caught in a door during a pivotal scene towards the end of the story (the remnants of the hot glue used to fix it in the door opening are still visible around the back of the head).

Condition: Very good. Overall measurements approx. 15 x 18 inch. (38 x 46 cm)

This is apparently the only surviving head in this condition from this particular story and according to the vendor it is especially rare as the chin plate is still clear (as opposed to spray-painted silver) and the holographic foil behind the 'headlamp' is intact. It was obtained by the vendor directly from Richard Gregory who designed the updated Cybermen. US$500-670

Upon bidding it will be deemed that you have read and fully understood Cooper Owen's Terms and Conditions and Summary of Charges. These can be found on ebay and Cooper Owen's website. Please note that all terms outlined on Cooper Owen's website take precedence.
